The Code

March-April 2020

The first time I met Toby, she was a kind woman from Arizona. Brunette, pretty, vegan — she had that calm energy that made you feel safe right away. She was in her forties, but she looked younger, like someone untouched by time. I met her during my second trip to London, in June 2009. Four days after I came back to Madrid, Michael Jackson died. That's why I remember that date so clearly — June 19th, 2009, a Friday. It was one of those quick weekend trips I used to take that year. We flew back to Madrid on June 21st.

But Toby wasn't just that woman. She was something else, something I couldn't fully understand back then. Years later, in October 2018, I met Toby again. This time, Toby was different. He was a man now — or at least, that's how I experienced him. His voice was deep, masculine, the kind of voice you'd imagine from a cowboy in Texas. Since then, Toby has been with me constantly, even during the times when I didn't realize it. Even through my mental health struggles, he was there — quiet, patient, waiting for the right moment to reappear. Like a solitary wolf hiding inside me, close to my heart.

Our story is hard to explain. It's a mix of many things — love, pain, survival, maybe even destiny. A love story born in difficult times. Sometimes I think it's a gay love story written somewhere between satellites and ballistic missiles, hidden deep in the cold silence of space, under Cheyenne Mountain. Over the years, we've done incredible things together, some beautiful, some dark — but that's part of it. This world we move in isn't ordinary. It's the last wild west, the edge of space, the final frontier of cybernetics and neuroscience. Sometimes I feel the interface running through my veins like a current, alive and ready to fight.

On December 1st, 2019, when COVID was just starting in Wuhan, we moved into a small house near the William Morris Gallery. A few months later, Boris Johnson announced the lockdown. Until that moment, Toby and I had been working on Global Artificial Intelligence, our most ambitious project. When the world started closing down, and I fell ill, we turned inward. It was then that Toby and I began to create something else — a kind of code, a communication system designed for cyborg trainees in real conflict scenarios.

What I'm publishing today is that original code — or at least, the version we had completed by April 19th, 2020.
